Forester, B. E., Magnussen, M. "Sport as Political Arena: The Effect of Professional Sport Organization Position on Sport Consumer Attitudes and Behavioral Intentions" (On-Going) Politics can be a divisive area of discussion. Issues such as abortion, entitlements, immigration, marriage, and taxes can result in heated political debates. Interestingly, the potential divisiveness of political issues has not stopped sports figures from inserting their opinions on such issues into the realm of professional sports. For instance, the Miami Marlins (of MLB) suspended team manager Ozzie Gillen five games for his comments praising Cuban dictator Fidel Castro. Specifically, Ozzie told Time magazine he loved and respected Castro. His comments were met with outrage by Miami's Cuban population, many of whom escaped Castro and his communist regime to take refuge in Miami. In light of incidents such as the Ozzie-Castro controversy, this study will explore the impact of a hypothetical sport-politics scenario on sport consumers' behavioral intentions. Specifically explored will be the mediating effects of avoidance and revenge desire on the relationships between positive/negative attitudinal responses (to a hypothetical sport-politics scenario) and patronage reduction and negative WOM intentions.
